What Is Testicular Cancer?

Testicular cancer is unusual in that out of all the cancers, it tends to affect younger men overall. There are different types of testicular cancer, including seminomas and non-seminomas which respond well to chemotherapy; Leydig Cell Tumours and Sertoli Cell Tumours are less common types of the cancer.

What Causes Testicular Cancer?

The causes are not known but are thought to include having a family history of testicular cancer and being born with undescended testicles (cryptorchidism).

“I was really devastated for my son when he was diagnosed with testicular cancer. It felt like my whole world fell apart, and I just didn’t know what to do. The doctors only seemed to want to give us finite responses and didn’t seem to truly want to help us. I decided to look online to see if there was anything that could help, and I came across your site...

Lo and behold, I told him about the testicular health plan you devised, and he decided that it was worth a shot. I have implemented what you taught us, and he is now taking the Serrapeptase, the Curcumin, and the 1st Line (Thiocyanate) Immune Support Kit. It is early days, but I can already see hope on the horizon, and my son says he has more energy when he wakes up in the mornings, which can only be a good thing. I will keep you informed.”

“Robert, I have found Serrapeptase to be an absolute miracle substance. Having suffered horrendous left testicle pain for about 25 years, so called chronic epididymitis, I have taken 2 x 80,000 IU of Serrapeptase twice daily for about the last couple of months. I am virtually pain free since I have started taking Serrapeptase. I have been to numerous doctors and urologists over the years, all to no avail. Some sort of blockage did show up on the left vas deferens during a recent ultrasound scan. Their supposed answer to my problem would be rather drastic though - removal of the left testicle. I declined the operation.”
