

Leg Ulcers

What Are Leg Ulcers?

Leg Ulcers are chronic sores that appear on the legs and feet, causing itching, pain, and swelling in the affected areas.

What Causes Leg Ulcers?

Leg ulcers can be long-lasting, and symptoms can include discolored or even hardened skin around the ulcer or the sore itself, which can produce a foul discharge. When there is constant high pressure within the leg veins, a venous leg ulcer can develop following a minor injury.

Leg Ulcer FAQ

Q: Hope this finds you well. I have a query regarding use of Serrapeptase. I have only 6 months to go before I qualify as an adult branch nurse, and I have been pondering leg ulcers of late. I know that ingestion of Serrapeptase would help, but I was just reading about chewing a tablet or capsule to ease a sore throat, and I wondered if the contents of a capsule/s could be put directly onto a wound? Have any studies been done regarding healing of long-term wounds using Serrapeptase externally? Any info or thought you may have would be appreciated.

A: Serrapeptase is very good for clearing any inflamed dead tissue, and we have good results with diabetic ulcers. I also recommend spraying with colloidal silver; stopping starchy carbs is recommended too.

Also, exercise on the back, cycling the legs in the air with help from someone holding the legs. This gets fresh oxygenated blood to the area to help the healing process. This all takes 1-2 months at the most to get them clear. You could put Serrapeptase directly onto the wound in the same way that they put maggots onto it. If you can persuade a doctor to run a pilot study compared to conventional treatment, you would be a first.

“Whenever situations present themselves, we point people in the direction of Serrapeptase as we both believe it to be a valuable help. A friend of ours has a friend who had a leg ulcer which would not heal. This person started taking Serrapeptase - it cleared the ulcer!”
